The Polleys Have a Reunion and Everyone Had a Good Time—
 Mr. Wilds Has Been Appointed Superintendent of Car Repairing—
 Cut Glass Company Will Move to Prompton.

Roll back Time's scroll of vanished years,
 We'd hear ancestral song and story;
 We'd share again their hopes and fears,
 While they were seeking local glory.
 Those were the good old days of dreams,
 When "freemen" swore by bluff "Old Hickory."
 But things aren't always what they seem,
 (Your coffee's sometimes made of chicory.)
 But here's a little glimpse of Wayne
 Ere steam cars came, when folks used candles,
 When "mutton hams" were sold for gain,
 When "hornless cows" still wore their handles.
 So, read the yarn, enjoy the reading,
 Contrast the Then with Now, Today,
 'Twill cure your longing for receding,
 The Present's good enough. Let's pray
 That men may wiser grow and better
 As Time rolls on our years to fether.

Voices From the Past
 Tell of Early Honesdale Life.

HERE, Woodward, I want to show you something." It was the voice of Mord. Simons, Hawley's well known contractor and builder. He was calling from ex-Sheriff Murphy's new building that he is erecting. What he had to show was so full of interest that we must tell Citizen readers all about it. From a No. 9 1/2 canary envelope he carefully, very carefully withdrew a newspaper, old and yellow from the ravages of time, and yet well preserved. It was a copy of The Wayne County Herald and Bethany Inquirer, Vol. 1, No. 40, bearing date of October 2, 1834.

There you have it: 1834! Why, Honesdale was only a little, lusty seven-year old at that date. That was six years after they hanged Marthers the murderer at Bethany. It was two years before the Honesdale Bank was born. Squire Smith was then only a little barefooted eleven-year old lad catching chubs in the Dyberry, and, of course, that was years before the majority of "we uns," as the good people of the Southland say, were born. The typographical appearance of the Herald was most excellent. It was published by Kingsbury & Fuller, and it was edited by Ebn'r Kingsbury, Jr. No effort whatever was made to chronicle local happenings. There was no department given over to personal mention. There was not a line regarding the mishaps, marriages, prosperity or misfortune of the people of the new town. The death of Amanda B., daughter of Capt. Leonard Graves, was recorded.

At the head of the editorial department was the regular Democratic ticket. David D. Wagener, of Easton, was running for Congress. Nathaniel A. Woodward, of Wayne County, was running for Assembly, and Jediah Irish, John Huston, Jr., and Philip Lynn, of Northampton county, were also running for Assembly on the same ticket.

National politics was a white-hot proposition. General Andrew Jackson was President of the United States, and, judging from the Herald's attitude, to be loyal to the General was the greatest virtue imaginable, and to differ with him was treasonable.

The Whig ticket was composed of Alexander E. Brown for Congress, and Philip Lessig, Robert Simonton, Isaac McHale and Paul S. Preston, of Wayne County, for Assembly. The candidates for county officers were numerous. Seven people wanted to be Sheriff. They were Calvety Freeman, Joseph Miller, Elithu C. Keen, Oliver T. Hatch, William Moak, Thomas L. Mumford and Butler Hamlin. Joseph Miller was seeking a second term. He was the sheriff that hanged Marthers. For Coron-

WHITE MILLS

THERE is a peculiar charm about this little Wayne county village that the writer has not yet been able to trace to list source. Many of its homes are hidden away among the forest trees, and so far as the nest and its surroundings are concerned, they are homes indeed, every one of them, or they should be if appearances count for anything; but our great American poet, Longfellow, declares that "appearances are deceitful."

The "charm" began its active work when the 1:30 p. m. train stopped and a lot of nomads alighted and began the little hike across the river to the village. One of the hikers was telling his companion of a wonderful sandwich he enjoyed in White Mills once on a time when he struck the town as hungry as a wolf and didn't have time to wait for a regular meal. It was made of "that home bread," you know, with Wayne county butter, and "a little bit of cold beef" as a filler. There was also mentionings murmured about buttermilk, or beer, or something to wash down the sandwich with. Good as it was it was more than he could get around, and then he broke out abusively: "When I asked the lady what she wanted for such a feast—FEAST, mind you—holy smoke! she said it would be about fifteen cents! I never had anything that tasted so good in all my life, and it was the cheapest meal I ever ate!"

The writer hereof thinks he knows a little bit about advertising, but that travelling man could do the trick for any habesry or pork-and-beans establishment in the country, and he had me beat a mile before he was fairly started. Wonder who he was!

The Heptasoph Building. Away up the Honesdale road, past a hotel, beyond the bit of oiled street, still beyond the church, the opera house and the little store that clings to old-time methods of carrying a good part of its stock out in the air as a porch display, out among the sweet odored pines, out beyond the quaint bird house that is substantially perched away up in a big tree, also beyond the "pretty wayside well" that is surrounded with trim stone walls and covered over with planks to prevent the sun from gazing too long and burningly upon it. There is where the writer found the new building that is already the pride of the town. In the southwest corner is a marble corner stone, and on its face is the following:

The building is a large, two-story affair, built of nicely made cement blocks. The extreme length is about 100 feet and the width is about 45 feet. It will be used for meetings of the society, as a general hall, and for dances and sociable gatherings. In architecture it will be severely plain, and its plainness will be its distinguishing mark of beauty. It will be well lighted and ventilated, and when completed would be a credit to towns much larger than White Mills.

Going Some. The Honesdale road that constitutes the main street of White Mills is the most extensively traveled road in Wayne county. The residents of the town want it called "The Wayne County Boulevard." Last Sunday a certain personage of the town kept tab on the automobiles, carriages, motorcycles and bicycles that passed the main corner near the Union church. He began his vigil at 7 in the morning and closed at 7 in the evening. In that time 480 of these various vehicles had passed him, which makes an average of one vehicle every 1 1/2 minute of the 12 hours. This certainly calls for better and wider streets, and it also calls for oiled streets.

White Mills is Honored. This town was signally honored on Monday by the visitation of three of Pennsylvania's most prominent men, United States Senator Boies Penrose, Judge Ralston and Henry F. Walton, chairman of the commissioners who have the building of the criminal insane hospital in their charge. All of these personages are from Philadelphia, and they came here to call on Charles H. Dorringer, one of the board of directors of the institution recently partially completed at Farview.

After spending some little time with Mr. Dorringer our distinguished guests pursued their homeward way in their large touring car, via Milford and Port Jervis.

White Mills Personals. Mrs. C. H. Dorringer will next week leave for Cape Cod, Mass., where she will open her summer home. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dimmick and Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Dimmick motored from White Mills to the Blooming Grove Club house on Sunday last. After spending the day at that resort they returned to White Mills in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins, of Honesdale, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Berger, of White Mills, motored to Hawley and Taffon on Sunday last. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson with their daughter, of Newark, N. J., last week spent several days in White Mills with Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ellison.

Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Dimmick, of Scranton, spent the week-end with friends in White Mills, returning to the place where folks have enough time on their hands to "Watch Scranton Grow" on Monday evening of this week.
